ABOUT

Describing Poledance as „the German Fall Out Boy“ might be a bit premature given the band’s young history - Yet, the band from Berlin has big ambitions and has been proving its potential since the release of their debut album „Circus“ with captivating live shows and massive hooks.

Authentic, likable, and with full dedication, the band brings their energetic alternative-pop-rock-emo sound to the stage, knowing how to stay in listeners’ ears without sounding sticky.

The fact that a lot is happening with Poledance right now can be seen not only on the band’s social media accounts but also heard in their new single „Fever Dream.“ Right from the first listen, it’s clear: Poledance is daring even more into pop territory, yet they haven’t lost any of their energy. It’s a narrow line they skillfully dance along.

This is mainly due to the lovingly crafted details and a hook that practically screams in the listeners’ faces, forcing them to sing along by the second run-through. The multifaceted vocals of lead singer Daniel and the typical electronic elements, now even more prominently woven into the song, make „Fever Dream“ sound damn fresh. As the first single from the EP set to release in the summer, „Fever Dream“ leaves us craving for more and shows that „more pop“ suits Poledance extremely well.
